Agile software development is an approach to software development under which requirements and solutions evolve through the collaborative effort of self-organizing and cross-functional teams and their customer(s)/end user(s). It advocates adaptive planning, evolutionary development, early delivery, and continual improvement, and it encourages rapid and flexible response to change.

Estimates are an essential part of Agile Project Planning. Wikipedia: Software Development Effort Estimation has a pretty good summary of cost and effort estimation techniques. The more formal of the traditional approaches include COCOMO and Function Point Analysis (FPA), but in reality most estimates are based on expert judgement.

Scrum is an agile framework for managing knowledge work, with an emphasis on software development. It is designed for teams of three to nine members, who break their work into actions that can be completed within timeboxed iterations, called "sprints", no longer than one month and most commonly two weeks, then track progress and re-plan in 15-minute stand-up meetings, called daily scrums.

Most modern business application development projects use object technology such as Java or C# to build the application software and relational databases to store the data. This isn't to say that you don't have other options, there are many applications built with procedural languages such as COBOL and many systems will use object databases or XML databases to store data.
